Patrick Samuel – Asperger Artist

Patrick Samuel is an emerging artist with Asperger's Syndrome. Having returned to art after a 20-year break, Patrick picked up pencils, brushes and pastels again when he started his daily art therapy in December 2016. A time of prolific work as well as recognition followed, and Patrick has embraced his neurodiversity as a gift rather than seeing it as a disability; he's found his voice and his calling.

As an Enfield resident, Patrick is grateful for the overwhelming support of the local community and businesses. His work and his story have been recognised in local media, and meanwhile featured in magazines as well as on BBC Breakfast and BBC News online.

Marking one year of his creative journey, ESCAPE and RETURN is Patrick's first solo exhibition.

PATRICK SAMUEL + RETURN

"Art is my medium of escape; from the noise, the lights, the fumes and the constant stream of information. It's deafening and blinding. The pushing and the shoving, the race to get everywhere first and have everything now. I want it all to stop."

Painting and drawing lets me soar past the planets, where I can let my hands glide across the stars as I say goodbye to it all. Watch it fade away. And I do get that far when I realise how much I'd leave behind back on Earth; the trees, the sound of laughter and the colour of sound, the colourable real, the mythical and fantastic. I realise how much I'd miss it all. How much I'd miss you... This is my return."
